Druze Leader Says Goal of Factions Is New Constitution

GENEVA - Leaders of divided Lebanon have arrived in Geneva for talks that promise hopes of reconciliation but, if they fail, carry the threat of renewed civil war.

The talks, beginning Monday, are expected to last four to seven days, Johnny Abdo, Lebenon's ambassador to Switzerland, said. Leftist and Moslem factions will be seeking to revise a national pact

The leader of the Druze Moslem community, Walid Jumblat, whose forces fought the Lebanese Army and Christian Phalangest forces during fighting anothing Beirut last month, said he wanted the talks to lead to a rewnling of the constitution and a redistribution of power.

He said Saturday on Swiss television that he was not prepared to make concessions, but added: "I don't want to slam the door. I am going to give peace every possible chance."

President Amin Gemayel will preside over the talks at a hotel ar the old League of Nations

His father, Pierre Gemayel, the 77-year-old founder of the Phalangists, was among the last of the factional leaders to arrive Sunday.

Coup Leaders In Grenada Held By U.S. Forces

U.S. Marines captured General Hudson Austin, the fugitive leader of the military council that deposed Prime Minister Maurice Bishop of Grenada and led to the invasion by U.S. marines last week, the stateowned Caribbean Broadcasting Corp. said Sunday.

As resistance to the invasion was virtually ended by U.S. military forces, the island's British-appointed governor-general urged that schools, government offices and shops be reopened Monday despite erattered spiper fire.

U.S. Air Force planes were transporting food and other supplies into Grenada for the tired and hungry residents of the tiny tropical island. Electricity and water service was restored.

A casualty report issued by the Defense Department in Washing-ton increased the number of Americans killed in action by 5 to 16. The latest accounting reported 77 wounded and 3 missing. Extensive U.S. air action contin-

European Allies, Forced to Repudiate U.S., Assess Damage of Invasion

By John Vinocur

New York Times Service PARIS - Overnight last week, every West European who sees the United States as an unreliable, bellicose, immoral ally had found seemingly perfect justification in the U.S. invasion of Grenada. Overnight too, every West European who regards 0.3 missiles is a spout growing Cuban influence on safety considered his arguments as the French Caribbean island of safety considered his arguments as having been bolstered.

Governments defending cruise and Pershing-2 missile deploy-ment, scheduled to start in a few weeks, felt compelled to express disapproval of the U.S. intervention. The West Germans, among others, insisted they were not consulted in advance, a brusque and unsettling precedent. Those would normally have been beadline events, but next to the political damage Washington's main allies believe the invasion has caused them, the Soviet chumsiness was reduced to gnat-in-a-china

The extent of the damage to the Atlantic alliance is likely to hinge on how long it takes the Americans to leave Grenada. U.S. Military Reduces Estimate of Cubans on Grenada to About 750

By Fred Hiatt and David Hoffman

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - Pentagon officials have disclosed that they have reduced their estimate of the number of Cubans in Grenada from 1.100 to between 700 and 750, meaning that now the invasion force there is contending with only

"snipers and stragglers." Admiral Wesley L. McDonald, commander-in-chief of the U.S. force in Grenada, said Friday that several hundred Cubans had escaped into the hills and could cause problems for U.S. troops in the coming weeks

The new, lower estimate, which conforms to the oumber of Cubans that Havana has consistently claimed were in Grenada, means that most of the Cuban opposition has been accounted for, since at least 638 were captured and officials have said dozens were killed.

Administratioo officials had used the larger number as evidence of Havana's intention to occupy Grenada and turn it into what President Ronald Reagan called a "mil-itary bastion." Without retreating from their broad assessment of Cuban intentions, Pentagon officials said Saturday that a closer reading of captured documents had caused them to change their estimate.

They said they could not predict what effect the new estimate would have on the length of stay of the U.S. Army, which they continued to say would be "as short as possi-

The U.S. Agency for International Development began airlift-ing food and other supplies to Greoada oo Friday because of shortages that have developed since the invasion, administration officials said.

Marines made up the major part of the Grenada invasion force in the early hours of the operation. But as soon as initial objectives had been achieved, 5,000 army paratroopers from the 82d Airborne Division began moving in to relieve them. Most of the 700 army rangers who participated in the initial assault also have been relieved, the

According to Pentagon officials, the fleet was at sea and headed across the North Atlantic toward Lebanon when it was diverted to take part in the Grenada invasion.

"Now they're about to resume their journey," a Defense Department spokesman said Saturday. "They'll leave in the next few days and should arrive there in about

The marines currently in Lebanon are members of the 24th Marine Amphibious Unit, which is part of the multinational peace-

In another development, navy officials reported that a Cuban ship that was asked to leave St. George's harbor when the invasion began was still anchored 12 miles off the

"We're not sure what it's doing there," one official said, "She left when requested. But she dropped anchor the minote she reached international waters, and there's not much we can do about that. She could be serving as a radio relay station, though there's not much Cuban radio traffic left."

U.S. Senate Votes to End Restrictions on Press; Grenada Visit Proposed

WASHINGTON - Declaring "a free press an essential feature of our democratic system," the Senate voted 53-18 Saturday to end restrictions imposed by the Reagan administration on news coverage of the war in Grenada.

Senator Robert C. The amendment to end restrictions on news coverage in Grenada, offered by Senator Donald W. Riegle Jr., Democrat of Michigan, would mean that government officials could not limit press tours of the island to pools of several dozen journalists ferried in daily from Barbados 150 miles (about 240 ki-

Nakasone Renews Piedge on Military ASAKA, Japan (UPI) - Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone on Sunday renewed his commitment to a buildup of Japan's military strength during an annual military parade that was boycotted by the opposition and protested by antiwar activists.

Zia Seen Set to Resume Political Talks

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (Renters) - The president, General Mohammed Zia ul-Haq, faced with an II-week-old opposition campaign against his military government, will resume a dialogue with politicians early next month, official sources said Sunday.

General Zia began the dialogue earlier this month by inviting politicians to discuss a program he announced in mid-August that would lead to national elections by March 1985. His last meeting was with a group from the banned rightist Jamiat-i-Islami Party on Oct. 21.

The sources said that a meeting was set for Nov. 3 with Tanvir Hussaini, head of the Poor People's Party. So far, General Zia has held talks with politicians who do not belong to the Movement for the Restoration of Democracy, an alliance of nine banned parties that launched a civil disobedience campaign against martial law in August. He has said he would meet members of that coalition if they were not

In Beijing on Saturday, the Chinese news agency Xinhua said China had dispatched ships to find a life raft in the area, which is near Vietnam. Indian Says China Talks Were Fruitful

NEW DELHI (Reuters) — India and China failed Sunday to agree on a common approach to settling border differences, but the weeklong talks were fruitful and encouraging, an official Indian source said. The source said China had agreed to a sector-by-sector review of the border with a view toward comprehensive settlement. In addition, each side agreed to reconsider unspecified proposals that they had rejected earlier, and agreed on the relevance of historical evidence, customs and tradition and the inadmissibility of using force to acquire territory.

The frontier question has long strained Chinese-Indian relations, and caused a war in 1962. India accuses China of occupying about 14,000 square miles (38,000 square kilometers) of its territory and of claiming much more. The talks were the fourth in a series held alternately in Beijing and New Delhi for the past two years. Another round will probably be held next year, the source said.

The Actor's Studio and the widow of its famed artistic di-rector, Lee Strasberg, are in a court fight over the ownership of more than 1,000 tape record-ings made during critique ses-sions at the prestigious drama training school.

Anna Strasberg, the executor of her husband's estate, contends that the tapes are akin to a professor's personal lecture notes and belong to the Stras-berg estate. The Actor's Studio in turn regards them as the school's "textbook" property and says they are an integra and crucial part of the school's concational process.

The tapes were made in group sessions in which performers - often prominent stage and screen stars - acted out scenes and were critiqued by Lee Strasberg and studio

Anna Strasberg says her aim is to make her husband's tapes more widely available to people interested in the theater and acting. Her lawyer described the 36-year-old studio as "in effect a private club" because it has only 585 members.

Paul Newman, president of the studio, charged that Anna Strasberg's lawyers and press aides had turned the case into a

"sideshow".

Lee Strasberg died last year.

Until the Manhattan Surrogate's Court rules on the ownership issue, his tapes are locked up in a New York warehouse.

But the judge said prosecuting attorneys could play most of 14 recorded conversations between Mr. Young and some of the defendants in the case. The government had asked that Mr. Young be named an unindicted co-conspirator to allow use of the tapes as evidence. Judge Robert DeMascio said it was clear that Mr. Young knew that a friend was involved in a firm to which he awarded the city contract. Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - Interior Secretary James G. Watt, whose speeches condenining liberals and environmentalists have made him a favorite of ultraconservatives, will go to work for the Heritage Foundation when he leaves his Cabinet post next month, officials of the group said.

Mr. Watt will work for about four months for the public policy research organization as a "visiting distinguished fellow in energy and natural resources policy," deliver-ing speeches and writing articles to be distributed to members of Congress, a foundation spokesman said Friday.

This would not conflict with Mr. Watt's reported plans to help with liaison work between conservative groups and the Republican Party in 1984, according to Roger Mahan, the spokesman for the foundation. Mr. Watt could not be reached for comment on his job plans because he was traveling in Tennessee for a series of speeches to conservative Christian groups.

In 1982, he raised more than $1 million for the Republican Party through speeches to small gatherings of miners, ranchers, oil and gas company executives and other businessmen. That year, he was the party's No. 1 fund-raiser in the

Officials Say U.S. Now Assumes Iran Had a Hand in Bombings in Beirut

News poll reflected rapid shifts in public opinion as developments in the two areas unfolded. The survey was taken as the death toll rose in Lebanon, as U.S. forces consolidated their position on Grenada and as President Ronald Reagan prepared a televised address Thursday night to seek public support for his policies in both places.

However, the poll, a sample of 1,093 adults interviewed by telephone on Wednesday and Thursday, indicated that 50 percent of Americans apparently did oot believe that the marines can help keep the peace in Lebanon. It also indicated that 45 percent of the public blamed poor security measures for the death toll in Beirut.

Even so, 48 percent appeared to pprove of the presence of marines in Lebanon, compared with 36 percent in a Times-CBS News poll in late September.

The poll also found that the apto 49 percent from 46 percent last American troops were sent there. month, But a majority believed Mr. Reagan's advisers were making key foreign policy decisions for him.

The poll results seemed to underline the differences in how men and women view Mr. Reagan's conduct of foreign policy. Men, by 62 percent to 29 percent, approved of sending troops to Grenada. Only percent of women approved, while 43 percent did not.

Men, by a rate of 55 percent to 38, approved of sending troops to Lebanon. Only 41 percent of women agreed, and 48 percent did oot. Men and women were also divided over Mr. Reagan's handling of his job. Men approved of his per-formance by a 54-to-35 ratio, while Lieutenant Governor James C. the rate of approval among women was 43 to 39. Overall, those questioned were generally more receptive to many of the president's policies on Thursday night than on Wednesday, but the difference appeared to be attributable less to Mr. Reagan's speech Thursday night than to the accumulation of news accounts.

For example, the percentage of the sample who believed that Americans were in danger in Grenada jumped from 51 to 65 between Wednesday and Thursday night, but there was no statistically significant difference between the opinions of those who heard Mr. Reagan's speech and the views of those who did not.

Fifty-one percent said they be-lieved that Mr. Reagan was too quick to involve U.S. forces in international problems. Thirty-form

U.S. Senate Running Out of Time To Pass Extension of Debt Ceiling

Voting 53 to 25, it rejected a proposal Saturday calling for a the president stronger veto powers over spending — the so-called "line-item veto" of spending bills that President Ronald Reagan has

Baker Jr. of Tennessee, leader of the Senate's Republican majority, sternly warned his colleagues that they would be granting President Reagan the "al-timate executive power" over the government's purse if it let the debt-ceiling deadline go by, leaving the president to decide which checks go out.

But the Senate, which had been called in for a rare Saturday session on the debt bill, spent most of its time on other matters, including restrictions on press coverage of Grenada and funding of a Jordanian rapid deployment force.

At one point, Mr. Baker acknowledged the possibility — some senators say the probability — that the Senate would deliberately phinge the government into a credit crisis as a way to force the Congress and the administration to consider ways of reducing the deficit. Chinese Say Soviet Talks Improved Atmosphere

"It is past time for the American government - executive branch and Congress - to take the Soviet challenge in the Third World seriously and develop a broad, integrated strategy for countering it," Mr. Casey said Saturday.

Reagan's Visit to Seoul Raises Security Concern

By Sam Jameson Los Angeles Times Service

SEOUL - The attack Oct. 9 in Burma against President Chun Doo Hwan of South Korea has raised suspicions that the same persons may have been responsible for a Sept. 22 bomb explosion at a U.S. cultural center in South Korea and has raised security concerns over President Ronald Reagan's visit Nov. 12 to 14.

According to a Western diplomat, the U.S. authorities are taking additional precautions in connec-tion with the Reagan visit. South Korean officials said they also planned extra security measures. "Some people may complain that we are doing too much," one of parade is being planned, a Korean official said, and it is expected to attract more than a million people. He said it was unlikely, however, that the two presidents would be in an open car or would get out to shake hands in the crowd, as has been the case on past visits.

Lee Sang Ock, an assistant foreign minister, said the Seoul government was proceeding with plans to create "occasions on which Reagan will be seen by the Korean people and be able to see how much he is welcomed" despite a North Korean threat, made after the Ran-200n incident, that if Mr. Reagan visited South Korea "he won't leave alive." Mr. Lee said South Korea "can assure that Reagan will be safe."

A visit with the U.S. troops based here is expected to go ahead as scheduled and is not thought to involve security problems. President Chun has blamed

America as Goliath

If there is an argument at all for the way the Lt, too, cannot yet be fully reckoned, but it will United States invaded Grenada, President be far more costly than the loss of a dozen Reagan has been clumsy in making it. The rescue of medical students was, almost by his own admission, only a pretext. Their evacua-tion, if necessary, could have been accomplished by lesser means. The legal justifications were a sham. Such breaches of treaties and sovereignty can only be rationalized by the aggressions of others.

Four days after the landings, Mr. Reagan finally pointed to a valid question, conceding his underlying concern: What were all those Cubans doing in Grenada? But whether or oot the president is vindicated in his suspicions about a Cuban threat, he has surely failed to reckon fully with the cost of his response.

If Cubans, on behalf of the Soviet Union. were subverting Grenada's government and establishing a base "to export terror and undermine democracy" in Latin America, their expulsion is surely a proper U.S. objective.
What is the evidence? The presence of a force of Cuban worker-soldiers larger than Washington anticipated, better trained and hoarding more weapons than anyone knew. Though Mr. Reagan complained in March about the sirfield the Cubans were building, he either had inadequate intelligence about them before the invasion or is being served an inflated picture of their operation now.

Plainly the president was predisposed to attack, to seize a moment of turmoil on the island to rid himself of the Grenada headache. If his worst suspicions are confirmed, he will have denied the Russians and Cubans another Caribbean airfield, an auxiliary station for small-arms transfers and a modest source of oew recruits for international mischief.

Set this still uncertain gain against the price.

be far more costly than the loss of a dozen soldiers. Simply put, the cost is loss of the moral high ground: a reverberating demonstration to the world that the United States has no more respect for laws and borders, for the codes of civilization, than the Soviet Union.

To liberate Grenada from some local henchmen, and perhaps from Cubans, America has defined its duty and security in ways that make it look like a paranoid bully. To much of the world, the invasion appears no different than the Soviet suppression of Poland or the occupation of Afghanistan. Even friends in the emisphere and in Europe are tempted to think of the superpowers as equally selfish, possessed by geopolitical games. Privately, they may even raise a cheer for the Davids who dare to stand up to either Goliath.

Many Americans, to be sure, feel better about their country this weekend than last, The carnage among the marines in Lebanon struck them as one more sign of impotence. exposing a chronic failure of will to stand up to terrorists. Now, in tiny Grenada, Americans have shown that they can play hardball, too, that they can be just as tough at defending their turf as the Commies. Watch out, Nicaragua. Beware, Syria. Keep out, Russia.

It is a seductive but immature reaction, When all is done, pacifying Grenada will prove only the obvious about American power. The enduring test for Americans is not whether we have the will to use that power but the skill to avoid having to. A president who felt he had oo other choice last Mooday night should oot be celebrating a victory. He should be repair-ing the prior political failures and forestalling the bitter harvest to come.

- THE NEW YORK TIMES.

A Scalpel, Not a Club

From the start, what has troubled even many of President Reagan's supporters — and here we are oot talking of those who have simply wanted him to be tough — was a fear that he would approach the world boldly but crudely and would not bring adequate finesse to his purpose of restoring American power. One part of this anxiety has centered on Mr. Reagan's use of words, another on his use of weapons. The question has always been not just whether he was right in this judgment or that action but whether he might sweep on from a limited pronouncement or deed into something larger and more dangerous.

His speech Thursday night showed some of the familiar tendency to make statements with a potential for justifying outsized reactions. In both Lebanon and Grenada, the president said. Moscow had "assisted and encouraged the violence." Most will agree that events in once-tranquil Grenada would not have come to the point of a bloody coup without a Soviet role, although as usual the direct Soviet role is small. But it is all too possible to imagine extravagances of home-grown terror in Lebanon. The chronic Reagan inclination to blur the distinction between local causes and Soviet manipulation stirs unease.

At the moment, and things may change, the news from Grenada may be running the president's way. Some part of the testimony of the rts his alarm about their potential danger. The fears of Grenada's family of democracies are tending to be confirmed by the combat posture of the Cuban construction force and by the stores of arms found ashore. If Mr. Reagan cannot prove his claim that Grenada was "a Soviet-Cuban colony being readied as a major military bastion to export terror and undermine democracy," then ueither can skeptics wholly ignore it.

It is powerfully disturbing, however, to find the administration reaching for findings that came to light after the intervention to justify the decision to go in. Why are we there? How long are we meant to stay? What exactly is our mission in apparently feeling we are entitled and obliged to root every fugitive Cuban out of the hills? Admiral Wesley L. McDonald, who is in charge of the invasion, even said he would not rule out establishing a military base.

Is this policy? In Lebanon, something else is true. To the bombings, the president has reacted by raising and blurring the American stakes. He could have usefully centered on and defined the U.S. interest in helping the Lebanese rebuild Lebanon. Instead, he allowed himself to be drawn into setting open-ended goals of establishing credibility in a broad anti-Soviet context.

His immediate policy, moreover, seems confused. Against whom is "justice" for the bombings to be dealt? What purpose is served by allowing anger at Syria to get in the way of the eventually unavoidable requirement to work with Damascus as the force that counts on the Arab ground? Leaving aside the matter of Israel's contribution to the American distress in Beirut, what good can come of the president's hopes in Lebanon by insisting that be is really there for the interests of Israel?

Few who saw the American commander in chief on television Thursday could have failed to be moved by his tribute to the nation's dead. But such feelings are no substitute for sound policy. The president has the chance at least to break even in Grenada if he gets out quickly and goes on to convey that be understands the limitations as well as the uses of military power in a hemispheric setting. In Lebanon he is working in a context of terrible complexity where his primary instrument must be a diplomatic scalpel, not a club of vengeance or a blunderbuss campaign against a diffuse "com-tween the superpowers.

Neither of these predictions is very convincing. True, the European peace movement has been inca-pable of stopping the deployment in North Atlantic Treaty Organization member states. But it has nevertheless had an impact on Western public opinion by sowing profound doubts about the wisdom of nuclear deterrence. Western governments will now have to reckon with this skepticism when they seek support for new ouclear weapons or even conventional military programs.

The NATO governments' other hope is equally unlikely. If the Kremlin refused to compromise before any Western missiles were deployed, why should it accept such a compromise after deployment has started? This would make sense only if Moscow had once believed that the peace movement might in and that seems highly unlikely.

After all, the Russians have been strikingly unwilling to provide the peace movement with the evidence it needed to gain greater acceptance - evidence that unilateral restraint pays off (Moscow has built up its forces even as the negotiations proceeded), that nuclear war can be limited to Europe (Moscow has made clear that it would respond against the United States if attacked by missiles deployed in Europe), or that the Russians have done everything reasonably possible to attain a compromise in the Geneva negotiations (the Kremlin has maintained throughout that Washington, not Moscow, would have to forgo the deployment of new missiles). Clearly, neither the peace move-ment nor the hard-oosed septuagenarians in the Kremlin are going to change their views as a result of deployment. Western governments have insisted from the beginning that the alliance is merely trying to maintain the military balance, Yet, in the eyes of many of their citizens, they have failed to provide any persuasive rationale for matching the Soviet SS-20 missiles. NATO citizens ask: Ralance for what? How can deploying new medium-range missiles lead to anything but the perpetuation of the arms race?

Similarly, Washington has offered the Russians a host of technical arms control proposals that might have led toward compromise. But the Reagan administration has failed to offer any political incentives to reach agreement in Geneva. And to Moscow, an arms control compromise only makes sense if it provides a building block for a broader relationship.

The NATO leadership cannot hope to reassure the peace marchers or motivate the Russians to reach an agreement unless it can put negotiations in such a political perspective. Nuclear weapons are simply unacceptable — and not only to peace marchers - unless their clear purpose is to provide the basis for a under, more stable military and

The Origins of Reagan's Foreign Policy Failures

PARIS — The failure of the Rea-gan administration — and in its foreign policy, the time has come to speak of failure — is intellectual in origin. Mr. Reagan and his people are not, in this respect, unlike a great many other Americans; but they are in charge. They have now brought the country to a point where its allies are scared and alienated by the recklessness of American actions and the naivete of American explanations, and where the relationship with the Soviet Union has reached its lowest and most dangerous point since the Cuban missile crisis in 1962.

The convictions of the people who dominated the Reagan administra-tion when it took office in 1980 were simple. They believed that the United States had been weakened by arms control agreements, had been disarming unilaterally, and that a "window of vulnerability" had opened in the strategic missile relationship with the Soviet Union. They had the idea that the Western alliance had been undermined by the allies' supposed perception of American weakness, and that the allies were the victims of a successful Soviet campaign of intimida-tion, of Finlandization. They and their supporters still believe this. The Reagan people had a view of the Soviet Union made up of two seemingly contradictory opinions. On the one hand, they argued that the U.S.S.R. was an inefficient and overstressed society and economy, so that increased international tension, economic boycott, and an accelerated arms race might make it snap because of its internal weaknesses. On the other hand, the administration held that the Soviet Union had outstripped the United States in military power and was active and successful worldwide in subverting the West, making endless trouble, its hand in every crisis. As Mr. Reagan put it in a campaign interview: Let us not delude ourselves. The Soviet Union underlies all the unrest that is going on. If they weren't engaged in this game of dominoes, there wouldn't be any plied confrontation with the Soviet Union — boycott, arms race, challenge - and that is the way the administration started out in 1982. But it proved not to be the direction in which the American people, or the allies, wanted to go. Hence, there were big controversies over sending grain to the Russians, providing equipment for the Siberian naturalgas pipeline, credits, high technology exports, and over new nuclear missiles. The administration ended by not only signing new contracts to supply grain to the Soviet Union, but formally promising never again to interrupt the supply for political mo-Au administration which had begun its term seeming to scorn the idea of arms control as other than a ratification of American military superiority, found this an unsustainable position and began, very late, to look for compromises, even though its very ambitious arms programs went on. from which much of the content had been drained.

He had stumbled against U.S. public opinion, but also against the stony reality of the Soviet Union itself. Before, it had been to him an abstraction, not even a very well-defined one. But in the event it proved hard, intelligent, unyielding, and cruelty willing to use its power to embarrass the United States and inflict revenge for things done against it. Mr. Reagan also discovered that the European allies' view of their own security and of the Soviet threat was much calmer than Washington's, and that they found in Washington's new militance more cause for alarm than for reassurance. The alliance relationship became even worse under the Reagan administration than it been under the equally naive Jimmy Carter. The United States had become in the words of the late Raymond Aron, the distinguished (and conservative) French political commentator

-no longer comprehensible to either its enemies or its friends.

But the most fateful element in Mr. Reagan's approach was the conviction that Soviet action underlies all the unrest that is going on, acting, as he said Thursday, through a worldwide network of surrogates and terrorists. Every dispute or disorder was interpreted in terms of Soviet manipulation. Central America was not allowed the dignity of its own revolution. In Reagan administration eyes, the Sandinists in Nicaragua, the guerrillas in El Salvador and those operating in Guatemala, the luckless Prime Minister Maurice Bishop and General Hudson Austin in Grenada, the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Shiite illuminati of Beirut, the Syrians, all merely were figures at the end of strings leading to Moscow. This vulgar and unsustainable reductionism is the reason the United States now is in Grenada, Lehanon and El Salvador. These are accessible to American power. The Soviet Union is not.

The invasion of Grenada, the war against Central American radicalism and Marxism a defiant stand in Lebanon - these are what the Reagan administration has done to substitute for what it would like, if it dared, to do to the Soviet Union. But the result, of course, is confusion. The force illegally used against Grenada is grotesquely disproportionate to the provocation. The losses suffered by sense in terms of what they are accomplishing there. The administration's conviction that it all hangs together cannot be proven, and the result is disingenuous statements and official propaganda that alienates the international public. Mr. Reagan is in the most serious crisis of his tenure. What can he do now? He has acted as he believed right. He and his associates simply are out of their depth. As a result, the nation is too. It is a bitter and tragic irony that their deaths and the "chaos" that ensued should have occasioned the use of U.S. forces in Grenada, Mr. Bishop on that visit to Washington was seeking, almost desperately it seemed, some sort of political accommodation with the United States. What Course in Lebanon?

If the president does not change course he risks a Vietnam-style commitment. Instead of using the marines to help carry out his Middle Eastern policy, he may begin to shape his Middle Eastern policy around the marines. The president can avoid that tragic state by extricating the marines from Lebanese soil as quickly as it can honorably be done.

1908: Uproar Over Kaiser's Views BERLIN - The political storm raging around the Kaiser's head was never equaled since he came to the throne. The attacks are not confined to the Kaiser, but violent assaults are made on Prince Bulow, popularly held respon-sible for this breach of political etiquette, as the Kaiser's indiscretion in publishing his opinion is described by politicians. When the Reichstag meets next Wednesday, the Imperial Chancellor will be subjected to a series of interpellations in regard to the Imperial utterances. Testimony as to the Kaiser's anti-English feelings at the time of the Boer War add greatly to the awkwardness of the statement that the Kaiser prevented a Franco-Russian movement against England.

1933: Fascists Stage a Mass Wedding ROME - Grouped wedding celebrations for 2,620 couples, promoted by the Fascist Party as part of a campaign to increase the birthrate, were held in Rome and throughout the surrounding province. In the city, 820 couples celebrated the wedding Mass and received eucharistic benedictions in the Church of Santa Maria of the Angels, preceding an enormous reception for brides and bridegrooms. A crowd gathered to watch the novel ceremony. Mendelssohn's wedding march was played. At the reception, envelopes containing 1,000 lire each and a portrait of Mussolini were given to each couple. This afternoon, all were received by the Pope. Membership in the Fascist Party was a prerequisite for the ceremonies.

... And 3 Dangerous Traps He Faces

NEW YORK — In the most ago-nizing few days of Ronald Rea-gan's presidency, he is setting for himself three dangerous but still avoidable traps:

His statements have not left the nation a plausible line of retreat from Lebanon. Instead, he declared that keeping the Marines there "is central to our credibility on a global scale."

This reflects the fear of most presidents that if they withdraw even from untenable and unwise positions, the United States will appear to be - in Richard Nixon's phrase - "a pitiful, helpless giant." That attitude need-lessly prolonged the Vietnam War. Yet Mr. Reagan is unconvincing and inconsistent in explaining why the Marines are in Lebanon. They are variously described as a peacekeeping force, when there is no Lebanese peace to keep; as providing support for the Gemayel government, which governs nothing; and as protecting Israel's northern border, which Israel protects for itself. There may be some justification for the risks and casualties of a small U.S. presence in Lebanon, but this does not require the nation to pledge its "credibility on a global scale." So the president has gone further, suggesting that the Marines are carrying out an American "duty... to stop the cancerous spread of Soviet infla-ence." If so, then Mr. Reagan and the nation have been drawn like pitiful. helpless giants from the small beginnings of a peacekeeping force into perhaps the ultimate superpower confrontation. More likely, such talk is intended to justify the Marine presence to the American public — an effort that will make it harder for Mr. Reagan to withdraw from Lebanon if the time comes. And it may. To keep American forces there could require that they move actively into a civil war that could spread uncontrollably into international conflict; or it might demand commitment of larger forces, bringing higher risks; or it could bring an unacceptable toll of American casualties. Any of the above would lead to congressional efforts to force a withdrawal; that, too, would damage U.S. "credibility."

By Tom Wicker

It is neither folly nor cowardice to cut losses before they become intoler-able. The clear lesson of history, graphically taught in Victnam, is that the president - in his own mind and on the public record - should leave open the possibility of prudent, even tion of democratic institutions in Grenada," Mr. Reagan heightened suspicions about his motives. Secretary of State George Shultz, more responsibly, said the objective —other than aiding Caribbean allies and protecting Americans — was to "establish again governmental institutions responsive to the will" of the island's people.

Mr. Shultz thus cast the invasion in its best light, as a regional security action to promote Grenadian self-determination — a formulation that will not silence criticism but that if followed, and if buttressed by quick American military withdrawal, is defensible. But by promising democracy "at the point of a bayonet," as Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan put it, Mr. Reagan lent credence to charges of American imperialism and to fears that he may have the same

To the extent, moreover, that his objective is "democratic institutions" rather than self-determination, he may also have committed the United States to a long, difficult trial. Grenadians might, after all, choose some form of Marxism or Socialism, as do many other poor countries.

■ Mr. Reagan's activist, confronstrategic withdrawal from Lebanon.

By proclaiming that the United States intends to "help in the restoratational foreign policy — engaging forces in the Caribbean while Central America is in turnoil and before the body count is complete in Beirut -may risk more than it can gain.

"We cannot pick and choose where we will support freedom," he said after the Berrut bombing. "We can only determine how." The nation should have learned better than that, in the bitter years since it welcomed John F. Kennedy's pledge to "pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe to assure the survival and the success of liberty."

Mr. Kennedy came to know that U.S. power, like Soviet power, is limited; and the hard lesson of his time, as of Ronald Reagan's, is that Americans do have to "pick and choose" where they can most effectively "support freedom." Neither arms nor words can make it otherwise.

Gemayel On the Marines

By Amin Gemayel

The writer is president of Lebanon.

BEIRUT — Slightly over a year ago, in the aftermath of the 1982. war, France, Italy and the United States agreed to Lebanon's request. that they assist us by providing a multinational force. Britain later joined the force. Why did we request this assistance? What are the object? tives of the multinational force? What is it doing?

These questions are legitimate concerns that have been raised with particular poignancy following the barbaric attacks on the U.S. Marine compound and French troops.

One important mission of the multinational force was to help create ! conditions in which security could be... restored to all sectors of the population, in order to re-establish stability. in the country and renew Lebanesedemocracy. The multinational force quickly brought security to many parts of the Greater Beirut area, allowing the Lebanese Army to restone stability in other areas. The governs -ment could not have functioned without this aid, and the army has bene-" fited immensely from the support. and assistance it has received.

.The U.S. Marine contingent was . assigned one of the most important facilities in Lebanon, our international airport south of Beirut. The .. marines have ably protected this sen-« sitive and critical installation.

The multinational force was also, sent to Lebanon to help the government extend its authority to areas. evacuated by foreign forces. When the American and European soldiers arrived, the Lebanese Army was very small and had little equipment.

Moreover, the security situation was chaotic, the country was emerging from the trauma of not only the war and the tripartite occupation, but . also the horrible assassination of its. president-elect, my brother Bashir. I. had just assumed office, and I did not find a single Lebanese, including those who have since complained about the multinational force, who was not glad and thankful at the arrival of the Marines. Since then, the force has played a crucial and suc-cessful role in facilitating the extension of government authority.

Our government's base has been, destroyed by nearly a decade of violence. We are eager to rebuild this base to ensure that all elements of the population are equitably represented.

Consequently, for more than six months we have been seeking to pursue a reconciliation process among all major elements of the populace. We believed that the Lebanese Israeli accord would be the first step toward the withdrawal of all foreign forces, from Lebanon and, thus, toward ensuring a free climate for national dialogue. Ideally, reconciliation should have followed the liberation of our land and people. Later, events proved that the external forces had other plans for our country. As we continued to press for : national cutente, a major military offensive directed by external forces? was launched against Lebanese institutions to prevent the realization of our national objectives. The presence of the multinational force, and particularly of the U.S. forces, provided the necessary deterrent to arrest this attack, and achieve a cease-fire leading to national dialogue. It is certain. that the Conference on National Reconciliation, due to begin Monday, and other informal discussions in this direction, can only be pursued in the environment of stability created by this deterrent. Lebanon has been used as a battle field and chessboard by the parties to the Arab-Israeli conflict. Until Israeli, Syrian and PLO forces withdraw from all our territory, they will continue to use Lebanon to sabotage progress toward a regional settlement. Such a settlement is crincal notonly to the Middle East, but also to the West, whose oil supply has twice been interrupted as a result of Arab-Israeli wars. Resolution of the problem in Lebanon is a prerequisite for a regionwide settlement. Lebanon has been the victim of extremists - radicals, revolutionaries and terrorists -- because it was an easy target. By no means are we alone, however. The moderate Arab ... countries, traditional friends of the -United States, are all threatened. These moderates, including those on whose oil the West and Japan depend, are watching to see whether the West in general and the United States ... in particular will remain firm.

There is no doubt what will happen. should Lebanon fall to the extremists: It will again become a center of. international terrorism, but on a much greater scale.

For many years the Lebanese beno one would threaten us. "Weakne is our strength," we thought, But we ... were wrong. We have learned — but ... at what a price - that strength is, necessary to defend freedom

Sadly, tragically, Lebanese are not in the only ones who have paid dearly in the effort to restore democracy to-Lebanon. You can have no idea how o shocked and horrified the Lebanesed: were at the inhuman attack on the Marines and French troops. We who:~ have lost so many thousands of our ? loved ones to terrorism over these will past years - and I have lost several : members of my family - know that our sorrow is little consolation." The monumental tragedy shows us. all the qualities of those who oppose liberty here and elsewhere. To make a political point, they do not consider. the cost in men's lives, nor the awesome effect on the thousands to " whom these lives were so precious. To hold freedom in contempt is to hold man in contempt. This is the barbarism we face together. The Washington Post.

Sweden Leads in the Floaters Market With an Issue Totaling $500 Million PARIS — Floating rate notes were the major attraction of the Eurobond market last week, with Sweden, Belgium and Ford Credit of Canada insuing $600 million of paper.

Sweden was both the largest issue — $500 million — and the most daring with a final maturity of 20 years.

Investment bankers have been insisting for some months that FRNs have been transformed from a capital-market instrument to a money-market instrument and Smeder's off-market instrument and Sweden's offering is seen as yet one more confirmation of this metamorphosis.

without any loss of capital.

The only element keeping floaters from being regarded as a fully-fledged money-market instruments was the question of liquidity. Could holders always be certain of finding buyers, or would they have to knock down the price to be able to mload their paper? ECU medium term

For example, on Friday, the six-month interbank bid rate for deposits was 9 11/16 percent (on an annual basis). Six-month CDs of top-rated banks paid 9% percent. But floaters, typically, paying a quarter-point over the six-month offered rate, would fetch 10

Buoyed by studies, such as those of Salomon Brothers, showing that floaters consistently provide the highest yield compared with other cash management instruments, corporate treasurers, central banks and commercial banks have increasingly turned to the FRN market as an outlet for their temporary liquidity.

Further evidence of this last week was Chase Manhattan's issue of $200 million of 12-year FRNs designed for sale within the United States. There have been a handful of private placements using Libor pricing sold in the United States, but this is the first publicly registered issue. Interest will be set at the three-month Libor rate. No margin over Libor is deemed necessary to sell the notes because Libor is sufficiently higher than Treasury bill rates or domestic CD rates to appeal to U.S. institutions. In fact, many analysis believe that the standard quarter-point margin over Libor carried by most floaters is on its way out and that paper can be

Profits, Growth Are Under Strain

By Thomas J. Lueck New York Times Service

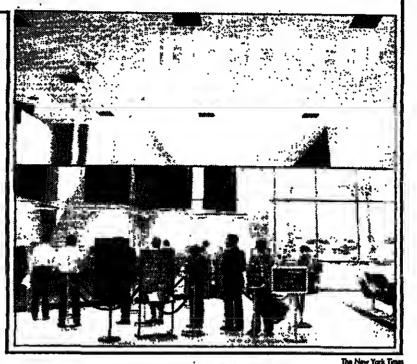

NEW YORK - After years of expansion, Texas's major banks are reeling from the first serious strains on their growth and profitability in more than a decade.

Since the early 1970s, Texas bankers had been blessed by an unusually robust economy. The surge in oil and gas drilling, followed by a boom in real estate development, produced steadily higher profits for banks. Especially in the state's two money centers, Houston and Dallas, banks were benefiting from their high-yielding energy loans. And in an unprecedented wave of acquisitions, several of the state'a bank holding companies grew geometrically by buying out smaller rivals.

But since mid-1982, after the oil boom went bust and Dallas and Houston became overbuilt with ultra-modern, mirrored glass office buildings, Texas banks have fallen out of favor on Wall Street. Especially in the wake of the collapse of the Penn Square Bank in neighboring Oklahoma, which had a huge portfolio of irrecoverable energy loans, banking industry analysts have expressed growing fears that some Texas banks might have similar problems,

And earlier this month, bank news that had seemed merely depressing abruptly turned

On Oct. 7, Interfirst Corp. of Dallas, the state's No. 1 bank holding company, reported the largest quarterly loss in the history of American banking, $194 million. Only a week later, another large energy lender, First National Bank of Midland, was closed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and finally sold to RepublicBank of Dallas in the second-largest bank failure in U.S. history.

maintains that it will be profitable in the fourth quarter. Robert H. Stewart, chairman of Interfirst's flagship bank in Dallas, characterized the bank's third-quarter loss, as "a bump in the road."

At the same time, Interfirst, which has been one of the nation's fastest-growing bank holding companies, is seriously reevaluating its management.

For most of the year, Interfirst had bridled at any suggestion that its loan portfolio might be flawed. But when it disclosed its thirdquarter loss, it also announced that William Breedlove, who had been chairman of the holding company's Dallas bank, had been

U.S. Continues To Push Japan On Phone Gear

New York Times Service TOKYO - Hisashi Shinto, the 73-year-old president of Nippon Telegraph & Telephone Public Corp., would just as soon forget his last meeting here with U.S. Trade Representative William E. Brock in

In that private session, Mr. Brock, according to U.S. officials, told Mr. Shinto in no uncertain terms that the three-year agree-ment to open procurement by Ja-pan's telephone monopoly to for-eign bidders had been of "little value" since it took effect in 1981. Unless NTT bought more U.S. equipment soon, Mr. Brock warned, he would not recommend to President Ronald Reagan that the pact be renewed at the end of this year — a move that would almost certainly lead to a closing of the lucrative U.S. telecommunications market to Japanese compa-

On Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Brock is scheduled to drop by NTT's beadquarters again, "I certainly hope my discussion with Mr. Brock will be more enjoyable than the one we had in February," Mr. Shinto said.

It should be. Earlier this month, NTT announced plans to buy several U.S. products, including a large system for handling comminications traffic from American Telephone & Telegraph International and a supercomputer from Cray Research Inc. The purchases will lift NTT's procurement of U.S. goods to $140 million in the 1983 fiscal year, ending next March.

By contrast, Japanese companies sold products valued at from $600 million to $900 million in the United States last year, depending on what items are classified as telecommunications equipment.

The $140-million level is minus-cule compared to NTT's yearly procurement budget of about $3 billion but it is more than three times the value of U.S. equipment bought in 1982 and nearly 10 times the 1981 figure.

Even Reagan administration of-ficials concede that, as one put it, After two years of bureaucratic Nonetheless, several problems remain that U.S. trade negotiators and industry executives said restricts access to Japan's telecommunications market, and NTT is the gatekeeper to that market.

More importantly, the Japanes telecommunications industry has traditionally possessed many of the characteristics that Japan's critics have branded unfair such trade practices as government-backed joint-research projects and government-endorsed purchasing arrangements favoring a small group of Japanese companies.

It is one thing, critics point out, for Mr. Shinto, a former shipbuilding executive who took over the public corporation in 1981, to call for opening up the procurement (Continued on Page 13, Col. 6)

Nakasone to Try To Ease Disputes

TOKYO - Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone has indicated that it would be impossible to resolve all trade issues clouding U.S.-Japanese ties be-fore President Ronald Reagan's trip to Japan, officials said.

Mr. Nakasone, bowever, agreed Saturday to step up efforts to bring the trade disputes under control in the next few months, apparently in a bid to keep them from becoming a campaign issue during the U.S. presidential election next year, Foreign Ministry officials said.

Mr. Nakasone gave his government's position in an hourlong meeting with U.S. Trade Representative William E. Brock, currently in Tokyo to pave the way for Mr. Reagan's Nov. 9-12 visit to Japan.

PARIS — Chase Manhattan Bank, acknowledging complaints of other banks that it has been playing a dual role as adviser to the government of Venezuela and chairman of the group of banks sching to negotiate a rescheduling of its debt, denied that it was involved in a conflict of interest.

with the Venezuelans a plan of ac-tion to refinance the $26 billion owed by the government and its agencies to the banks, More than half of this is short-term debt, due to be repaid within one year. No firm figure has been put forward for the debt owed by private sector.

U.S. Economic Upturn Is Greater Than Forecast

By Michael Quint New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Interest rates and budget deficits are at levels that were unthinkable during the ≤ 1970s, yet the U.S. economy is growing at a healthy pace and confounding forecasts of an anemic pis recovery from the recession.

The most suprising thing about this recovery is its normalcy," said Norman Robertson, chief economist at Melion Nation Bank, Pittsburgh. From his vantage point in the heart of the steel industry, Mr. Robertson said "smokestack ... Once Busy Clarendon Under IRS Control

New York Times Service

NEW YORK - The decor is bright and bold but the mood is somber at the offices at 650 Fifth Avenue of Clarendon Ltd., the commodity-trading concern once owned by Marc Rich, who is now a

"Oh, lots of people have gone," said one employee, shaking his head in disbelief. For Clarendon was once a bustling company, with assets of at least $1 billion last March, a vital part of the Marc Rich's $10-billion international commodity-trading network. Now, as a result of its much publicized prosecution on federal charges of tax evasion, the Internal Revenue Service controls all the company's

Late Tuesday, U.S. District Judge Richard Owen, in Manhat-tan, upheld the IRS's move to freeze all of Clarendon's assets. Federal tax officials said they were afraid that they would not be able to collect the $90.4 million in back taxes they calculated that Claren-don owed as a result of what they charged were illegal oil profits made by the company in 1980 and

The IRS, therefore, on Sept. 30, issued a "jeopardy assessment" against Clarendon. The judge agreed that the company, whose assets dropped to $261 million, from $1 billion, in four months, was attempting to place its funds beyond the reach of the govern-

Peter F. Ryan, Clarendon's chief financial officer and president of Richco Sugar, a trading company owned by the same group of people who own Marc Rich & Co. in Switzerland, denied this and told the court that "only because of the jeopardy assessment" was his company "in any peril of insolvency."
And a Clarendon trader who did not want to be identified said inside the courtroom, "If this jeopardy assessment goes through, we're out of business."

The problems of Clarendon, the U.S. arm of the Marc Rich network, were the result of a 56-page, 51-count indictment against Marc Rich and his companies for tax evasion, racketeering and trading with Iran at a time when a boycott was in effect. According to the gov-ernment, it all began with an elaborate scheme to avoid price controls on crude oil, a product on which Mr. Rich built his trading career.

In 1973 the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act was created. It set price controls on all crude oil produced in or imported into the United States. The legislation also allowed the Energy Department to limit the price that could be charged for domestic crude oil.

Under the regulations, the price varied for different categories of oil, based on the type of well from which the oil was pumped and when the well began production. It was these categories in the regulation that Rich exploited, the goverment charges.

Stripper expected to be set at a 21/2 percent oil, the highest priced, was oil from premium over the prevailing Tokyo wells producing an average of less than 10 barrels a day.

Only the stripper oil was free from price regulations. The government asserts that the Marc Rich network in effect reclassified the old and new oil as stripper oil and sold it at premium, uncontrolled prices.

The profit in relabeling oil was clear. Stripper oil could be sold at world market prices, at times as much as $15 to $20 more a barrel than old and new oil. The domestic company, Marc Rich International, realized as much as $100 million in unreported profit from this scam, the government charges.

To get around the limit, the government said, two oil-trading concerns in Texas --- both now bankrupt - were enlisted to form a trading network that was sufficiently convoluted — the governmake the relabeling of price-controlled oil possible.

This was not understood to be a nmon practice in the industry," said John Rathie, a attorney at Atlantic Richfield Co. in Los Angeles. "Obviously it was a possible practice if someone wanted to violate the law. But it's like any law that's being violated - there was no feeling that this was widespread or intelligent."

Nevertheless, the government says, the original brokerage con-cern, Marc Rich International, would sell low-priced, controlled would then sell it again several times. At the end of the chain, Marc Rich International would buy back the same oil that had been sold into the chain, except that it was by then described as stripper oil. The company could then sell

The indictment charges that West Texas and Listo emptied their pots by billing Marc Rich Interna-tional, now Clarendon, for high-priced stripper oil. Marc Rich would have paid a lower controlled price for the oil it was selling into the Texas daisy chain. But, the govciently convoluted — the government charges that the two Texas ment calls it a daisy chain — to brokers would kick back to Rich the difference in prices.

The indictment also said that periodically the profits that had been transferred in this way would be moved out of the United States, through a series of false transactions, to foreign bank accounts of Marc Rich's Switzerland-based parent company, Marc Rich & Co., and its subsidiaries, Rescor Inc. and Highams Consultants, both in

PET SEMATARY

By Stephen King, 373 pp. $15.95. Doubleday, 245 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10167.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

COMEWHERE, around the time in 1980 I when his novel "Firestarter" was published, it was written (I think), or said, that Stephen King was at work on a book that was frightening even to him. This was a fairly intriguing rumor, because since 1974, when his first novel, "Carrie," came out, this prolific genius of horror had produced some fairly scary books, among the best of which were "The Shining" (1977) and "The Stand" (1978).

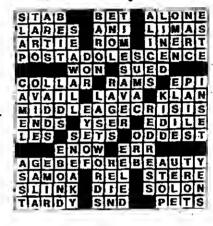

But then, after that rumor got around, there came a number of books that were unlikely to have fit its description. It could not have been "Cnjo" (1981), which was effective enough in its account of a killer dog on the loose, but hardly nightmare material. Nor could it have been "Different Seasons" (1982), an uneven collection of novellas, or "Christine" (1983), the rather slow-moving story of a homicidal car with a couple of frightening moments here and there. And it certainly wasn't going to be his latest book, "Pet Sematary," with its downright silly title, inspired by a place on the edge of a Maine forest where children had gone over the years to bury their dead dogs and para-

Actually, there are a number of things that at Accurately, there are a number of things that at first seem silly and innocuous about King's latest thriller. Along with the name of the book, there are the titles assigned to its three parts, "The Pet Sematary," "The Micmac Burying Ground" and "Oz the Gweat and Tewnon."

There are all the portentous epigraphs about famous burials and Jesus's raising of Lazarus. And there's the first visit to the "sematary," shortly after Dr. Louis and Rachel Creed and their two children, Ellie (5 years old) and Gage (a year old), arrive in Ludlow, Maine. It is out in the woods in back of the colonial house they have just driven all the way from Chicago to settle into. It has little grave markers with messages on them, such as "Smocky the Cat. He Was Obediant" and "Biffer, Biffer, a helluva smiffer, until he died he made us richer."

Solution to Friday's Puzzle

Who increation does King think he's scanne with the clantrap? But it is simply amazing how quickly the mood proceeds to thicken. There is the anthehicity of the story's Down East characters, particularly nice old Jud Crandall, who lives across the road from the Creeds and shows them.

them the "sematary." There is the author's sweetly folksy evoca-tion of the Maine countryside ("and now there was soldenrod, that late-summer gossip which comes is nattle on autumn every year") and, by way of contrast, the piling up on the page of brand-mone products annoying at times but useful to King in establishing the unstable quality of his domestic settings.

There is Ellie's beloved cat, Winston Churchill, or Church, which seems to be killed one day by a speeding oil rig, but then comes back. "like the cat in the nursery thyme."

And then King does something unspeakably cruel and heartbreaking, something that he has been toying with for a couple of books now, something bad enough so that he does not in the least appear to be straining for effect when he writes, by way of introducing what is going to happen next in "Pet Sematary," "It's probably wrong to believe there can be any limit to the horror which the human mind can experi-

But never mind the horror, which, when the last drop of blood finally spills, does not seem much worse than the experience of reading a 373-page version of W.W. Jacobs's famous short story, "The Monkey's Paw," which King honorably invokes a couple of times in the unlikely event that we have forgotten, or never knew, about the old couple who wish on a nan that their son, recently mangled in a factory accident, would come back from the

What has always made King so effective as a storyteller is his instinct for subtly exploiting the unconscious hostility and consequent guilt that men and women feel in the routine of living with each other and raising their children. And what works particularly well for him' in this latest of his fictional nightmares is the way old Jud Crandall seems to be offering relief to Louis Creed.

So "Pet Sematary" seems, after all, the book that scared even its creator. And, sure enough: the dust jacket copy confirms it, announch that Stephen King found his story "so homity-ing that he was for a time unwilling to finish writing it." One can sympathize with his feelings, but one also has to suspect he ran into a technical problem - that is, how to sustain the terror of the story without switching its point' of view.

Yet the illusion of "Pet Sematary" is never seriously dispelled. Once again, as I edged myself nervously toward the climax of one of his thrillers, I found myself considering what-wonders Stephen King could accomplish if he would only put his storytelling talents to seri-ous use. And then I had to ask myself: if King's aim in writing "Pet Sematary" was not entirely serious by some standard that I was vaguely invoking, then why, somebody please tell me, was I holding on to his book so hard that my knuckles had begun to turn white?

Filly All Along Wins Rich U.S. Turf Race

(AP) - All Along ran away from nine rivals Saturday for an easy victory in the $585,700 Turf Classic at Aqueduct. It was the fourth straight year that a French-based filly has won the race, Anifa having triumped in 1980 and April Run in 1981

Under jockey Walter Swinburn, All Along finished 8% lengths ahead of Thunder Puddles. The 4-year-old winner of the recent Prix de l'Arc de Triumphe in Paris carried 123 pounds under the weight-for-age conditions of Saturday's race; she completed the 11/2 miles on a firm course in 2:34.

On Oct. 16, All Along won the Rothman's International on the grass at Woodbine in Toronto, and if she wins the Nov. 12 Washington, D.C., International, also on turf, she will win a $1 million bonus offered for a sweep of all three.

Stenmark's Olympic Status Unsettled

STOCKHOLn (AP) — The president of the International Ski Federation said Saturday that no final decision has been made on the Olympic eligibility of Swedish star Ingener Stemmark, despite word from other officials indicating he would not compete at the 1984 Winter Games. Marc Hodler, the Swiss president of the FIS, said Stenmark's status will be discussed by the FIS council next weekend in Bern. Hodler took issue with Serge Lang, chairman of the World Cup Committee, who on Friday said Stenmark would not compete at the Olympics because he holds a "B" license, allowing him to keep all the money he earns from endorsements the day he retires from skiing. "It is certainly not within the authority of the chairman of the World Cup committee to make a decision," Hodler said. Lott Pensacola Golf Leader by 1 Stroke

The Eagles, 4-5 after their third straight setback, took the kickoff after Allegre's final three-pointer and marched to mid-field before a Ron Jaworski pass was intercepted by Derrick Hatchett; it was Philadelphia's fifth turnover of the day. The Eagles mounted a final drive, but Tony Franklin was well short on a 62-yard field goal attempt with 15 seconds remaining.

Allegre's performance spoiled a big day for Eagle wide receiver Harold Carmichael. He threw the first touchdown pass of his 13-year career - a 45-yard strike to Mike Quick - and caught a TD pass from Jaworski for a club-record 78th touchdown; he and Steve Van Buren had shared the old mark of

"What's the purpose of trying to find more study time, of trying to make the transition easier for freshmen athletes, if you're simply going to create another program for them? What's the purpose of trying to economize if you're going to mcrease scholarships?"

Athletic Director Dave Maggard of the University of California, Berkeley, a member of the NCAA Council and chairman of the June meeting at which Division 1 representatives supported the freshmaneligibility rule, said the cost of regenerating a freshman program was one reason the council overrode the select committee's recommendation.

"This wasn't done out of defiance," Maggard said. "It's simply the consensus of the membership that there is no real evidence yet that freshmen athletes can't handle it. In fact, the cursory surveys indicate otherwise. It's also the membership's consensus that there's no need to change the rule when most schools are playing only two or three freshmen anyway.

"Most still want to provide an avenue for the outstanding fresh-.man who's able to handle it. Most still prefer to leave it up to the individual institution and the individual case depending on the maturity of the freshman. Besides, there's a lot more redshirting of freshmen [leaving them taining a year's eligibility than most people realize, and 1 don't see the stigma. Most students don't graduate in four years anyway. Giving him a fifth year can be very helpful to the whole educational The NCAA proposals are designed to (1) toughen entrance and testing requirements, (2) force stu-dent-athletes to take a higher number of degree-oriented courses and (3) produce an earlier declaration of a major. That, Maggard said, "will take care of some of the problems the select committee has identified, since it will bring in studentathletes who have a great chance to succeed. On balance, what we have right now is working reasonably well and will work better in the future." Some may see in Maggard's interpretation the possibly biased view of the athletic departments, perhaps seeking only victories, unproved recruiting and continued access to the freshman athlete. But even in that, and even among coaches, there is not unanimity Many, including Penn State foot-ball coach Joe Paterno, have been outspoken critics of freshmen eligibility. The pros and cons have been chronicled previously. Now it all seems to be coming to a head again.

Reviving Huggermugger

B; William Safire WASHINGTON — In a colsigns made to the Syrians in recent Lebanese negotiations by the thenenvoy Robert McFarlane, now national security adviser, Joseph Kraft wrote: "For an American presidential emissary to be deeply engazed in such huggermugger is at best undignified."

Huggernugger is not, as some modern urbanites might think, the name of an amorous thief. Nor is it slang. Huggermugger is a glorious Standard English word; as a noun. sometimes appearing as hugger-nuggery, it means "secrety" or "confusion"; as an adjective, it sometimes means "jumbled," but usually means "secretive" with a concotation of "duplicitous." Here's how Shakespeare used it in 'Hamlet": As Claudius considers the problems surrounding him and the mistakes that have been made, he tells Gertrude of "the people muddied, / Thick and unwholesome in itheir] thoughts and whis-oers / For good Polonius death; and we have done but greenly / In hugger-mugger to inter him."

This word was very big four centuries ago and deserves a revival. It comes from hoker-moker, a reduplication of the Middle English mekeren, "to conceal," and should not be confused with higgledy-piggledy which is "scatterbrained with skullduggery, which is "trick-

Desoite what most dictionaries say never hyphenate huggermugger. When a word sneakily makes it through four centuries, it deserves to eject its hyphen. Consider another nid word churned up by the conflict in Lebannn: hardscrabble. Thomas L. Friedman of The New York Times wrote from Beirut of "an Israeli soldier standing watch on a hardscrabble hillside." This is an Americanism, first spotted in the report of the Lewis and Clark expedition in 1804: "Got on our way at hard Scrahle Perarie." In that early usage, the words meant a barren place, where it was hard to make a livelihood. In "Moby Dick," Herman Melville extended the use to mean "vigorous effort under great stress"; the author joined the words to make a compound adjective: "While taking that hard-scrabble scramble upon the dead whale's back."

Now it is one word, which I use without a hyphen in veneration of its venerability, with a silent sainte to Melville. The adjective today means "grudgingly yielding a liv-10g."

JOHN J. Louis, U.S. ambassador to the Court of St. James's was replaced recently. In wishing the bounced envoy a fond farewell, President Ronald Reagan wrote: "The alliance today between the United States and Great Britain is adamantine and for that you are in no small part responsible."

Adamentine is not what you would call a typical Reagan word; is not a word handied about at the White House Mess, either.

The word means "firm, unyielding," from the Greek words for "not to suhdue." The best political use of adamant was Winston Churchill's axymoronic hlast at an irresolute politician as "adamant for drift." However, I can find no recent diplomatic use of adamantine; some writer must have asked, "What's a good word for 'too tough to break ?" And out went the presidential letter with adamantine.

IN looking for a word that would describe an individual who hated men," writes Dr. Warren Guntheroth, professor of pediatrics at the University of Washington, "1 found none. Comparable words include misogenist for those who hate women and misanthrope for those who hate mankind." Dr. Guntheroth suggests a new word for what he believes to be an unlabeled idea: misandronist, using the Greek root for "man."

He's not the only one. At the City University of New York, Charlotte Alexander, teaching "Women in Literature," wrote misogyny on her blackboard for the hatred of women, and then - lol - she put what she thought was a coinage for the opposite; misandry, misandrous, etc.

Good thinking, hut no coinage cigar. Misandry, from the Greek misandros for "hating men," is in the 1961 Merriam-Webster New International Dictionary, and the Oxford Dictionary Supplement traces it to 1946. What's wrong with good, old-fashioned man-hater?

Counsel From First Fulbright Scholar

By Bernard Weinraub New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — He laughs and calls himself "an old fogey." At his cluttered desk, he squints at a sheet of paper and starts to read and mumbles: "I don't have my best glasses for reading. Getting old and blind, lucky to be here "I was 78 in April," says J.W.

Fulbright. "Don't you think I justify calling myself an old fogey?" If young congressmen still invite him to Capitol Hill for lunch, if foreign diplomats still visit his small office in downtown Washington, Fulhright professes amazement. "I guess people want to hear an uld man reflect about the past," he says. Not quite. Although he left Congress on the last day of 1974 after 30 years in the Senate, Fulhright remains the same shrewdly observant foreign policy special-ist that made him for 15 years one of the most powerful chairmen of the Foreign Relations Committee and a dominant intellectual force in Congress. He is gloomy about relations with the Soviet Union in the aftermath of the Korean Airline tragedy, and says with sadness, even dismay, that U.S. foreign policy remains perentally stamped by a "macho" and "John Wayne approach."

"We are such a young country," he says, slumping in his chair and placing a cigarette in the center of his lips. We feel we're the good guys. Every contest with the Russians we've got to win. There's no thought that you compromise. We have this football mentality. Win, win,

In retrospect, he says, Dwight D. Eisenhower was probably the most effective president in the last 30 years, Richard M. Nixon should be praised for struggling vainly to reach some accommodation with the Russians and Lyndon B. Johnson was equally tragic and fascinating.

"He had great personal power. great dedication to the job and I think of him as very tragic," said Fulhright, seated in his office two hlocks from the White House at the law firm of Hogan & Hartson.

"Old fogey" Fulbright in his Washington office

Johnson that was unexpected," said Fulbright. "He was very sensitive that be had little formal education, little experience outside American politics. I was with him once when he was vice president and we went in a NATO meetic. : Paris. He had never been to Paris before. He was very shy, very conscious of the fact that he didn't speak French. He didn't want to go out. He asked my wife to shop for his wife." It was Fulbright's break with Lyndan Johnson in 1965 over the Vietnam War, while the Arkansas Democrat was chairman of the Foreign Relations committee, that remains probably the most publicized moment of the senator's long congressional career. But there were other moments that made Fulbright one of the Senate's titans. As the first Rhodes Scholar to serve in the Senate, Fulbright was the man who introduced the congressional resolution that led to the creation of the United Nations. He spurred the exchanges of students between the United States and nations abroad in what is called Fulbright scholarships. He was an early and forceful opponent of McCarthyism.

On a more controversial note, "There was a shyness about Fulbright's consistent opposition to Israel's policies once led former prime minister Golda Meir to say that he had never said a good word about Israel. And Fulbright himself has been embarrassed by his past opposition in the 1950s to legislation supporting civil rights.

Following his primary loss in 1974 to Dale L. Bumpers, Fulbright joined his current law firm. "I'm an adornment here," he says, smiling, "I'm an old man of counsel."

Plane flights abroad disagree with him now, and he spends the bulk of his time reading, lecturing, speaking to associates in the firm, and lifting the telephone to chat with his network of friends and former Fulbright students in Washington and abroad.

What depresses him, he says, is the sorry state of U.S.-Soviet relations. "There is a kind of paranois on our part about the Russians, about communism," he "I remember talking to Khrushchev when he came here. He pointed to a mole on his face. He said, 'I may not like this mole, but I've learned to live with it.'

"What Khrushchev was actually saying to me was, in effect, that the United States may not like the Russians hut we have to recog-nize their legitimacy," said Fulbright. "And we seem unable to do that. We seem unable to understand their history and culture. We have this tremendous lack of knowledge about them. about why they're so sensitive about their borders, so difficult to deal with. We refuse to accept the idea that we can't dominate Asked which president he respected most, Fulbright replied: "My respect for Eisenhower grows almost daily. There wasn't this machismo factor like Kennedy and Johnson and Reagan. He refused, over great pressures from Dulles and Nixon and others, to go into Dienbienphu in Vietnam. He did not get us entangled in these foreign ventures. The country was economically strong. He understood foreign policy.

Nixon, the former senator said, deserves credit for trying to move toward a normalization process in the early 1970s with the Soviet leader, Leonid I. Brezhnev, but "hawks" in Congress, led by the late senator, Henry M. Jackson, Democrat, Washington, undermined chances of detente. It was Jackson who rallied Senate forces to block most-favored-nation trade status for the Soviet Union until the Communists permitted easier Jewish emigration.

Fulbright said it was "absurd" the way the United States selected presidents, compared with European democracies where leaders rose through ranks and developed experience within a parliamentary system.

"Here we bring in two presidents - Carter and Reagan with no experience in the federal government," he said. "The way we pick our president is the aberration of modern time, the current one fresh out of Hollywood. Absurd! Why even these small countries in Europe like Norway or Holland or Denmark, even these countries have more experience in foreign relations.

"Of course these countries were all occupied by foreign armies. They know what war is like. This is the only country not occupied by a hostile army, except in the South, where I come from. Maybe that's why it all looks a little different for me than it does

LONDON POSTCARD

An 'Orgy' of Albertiana

By Gregory Jensen United Press International

ONDON - Spurred by Prince Philip, Britain is making up these days for a century of neglecting Queen Victoria's consort, Prince Albert

A genteel orgy of Albertiana is spreading over the country, its centerpiece is a London exhibition suggested by Philip, Greek-born husband of Queen Elizabeth II, that throws sharp focus on the role he shares with Albert - husband or consort to a constitutional mon-

"You couldn't write a job specification for a consort," Philip told the show's sponsoring newspaper. There isn't a hlueprint for it. You just do it."

Philip's personality is the opposite of Albert's stiff, formal and overpowering manner. Philip is better liked in Britain, more independent than the versatile German princeling from Saxe-Coburg-Gotha who was Victoria's first cousin. But Albert left more than the nine royal children who later occupied half of Europe's thrones.

"It is only in recent years that the full range of Prince Albert's contribution to British national life has begun to emerge," Philip says.

"He merits a volume each as architect, designer, farmer and natu-ralist," says Robert Rhodes James, member of parliament and author of a new Albert biography. "Few men in modern times have made such a lasting and permanent mark in such an astonishing variety of

Among them, James lists popularizing the Christmas tree, reviving Cambridge University, rebuilding Buckingham Palace, founding London's Imperial College and many of the capital's great museums. The Prince Consort even gets credit for placing Landseer's sculpted lions beneath Nelson's Column in Trafalgar Square.

His last official act may have kept Britain and the United States from going to war. An exhibit in the show "Prince Albert, His Life and Work," crammed like a Victorian parlor into the Royal College of Art until Jan. 22, is the Trent Memorandum," Albert wrote this as he was dying in 1861. It advocated a soft stance toward a naval incident early in the U.S. Civil War that outraged official Britaio and could have sparked a war. The document is soppily inscribed in Queen Victoria's hand as the last work of "the beloved

Prince. Such sentimentality has always been Albert's problem, one major reason for the century of neglect. Victoria was so desolated when he died aged 42 that she spent the next 39 years in mawkish grief. "Who could survive that?" asks Hermione Hobhouse, the exhibition's organizer and author of 8 second new Albert biography. She says Albert's "image was blasted by this tiresome, boring, adoring wife and widow." Eight other museum shows are lanned, as well as Victorian Christmas celebrations, "Albert Weekends" and walks through "Albertopolis," the museum area of South Kensington. It is here, in Kensington Gardens, that Albert's statue now broods on an ornate and over-glorifying memorial that many consider the worst example of Victorian ex-

The area also holds three colleges, the concert hall that bears his name and four national museums, including the Victoria and Albert, all on land Albert bought with profits from his Great Exhibition of 1851. This, the first true world's fair, was perhaps Albert's greatest achievement. The show includes a mockup of the famed "Crystal Palace," which housed it, and reconstructs Albert's sober study with its furniture and objects, including $0 items loaned by the queen. Philip notes that now, as in Aibert's day, England's constitution strictly defines the sovereign's role but makes no place for a consort.

Nothing in particular is lain out. he says. "So the situation haso't changed for all of us consorts.

"Albert did use his position, within the proper constituticoal limits, to try and change society to try, you might put it, to improve and modernize," Prince Philip says.

"He got research done. He gave and inspired lectures on the modemization of agriculture. He encouraged the development of machines and methods in industry. This brought the monarchy much nearer the people."
